A MAGICAL MAKEOVER

EVERY ADVENTURER HAS THEIR swords, bows, and armor. Most lumber around with backpacks full of loot and treasure from their dangerous dungeon excursions. Yet despite how much they hope to be seen as impressive or intimidating, they'll never be taken seriously by most unless they can look good doing it.

Yes, the chumps will tell you that looks are just that and beauty is skin deep, but they'll be the first to be forgotten after all is said and done. A true adventurer knows how to leave an impression at first glance. Be it with the princess in need of rescue or a dragon to be slain, that first sight should set the stage for your glorious victories. So first things first, you need to look as powerful as you hope to be.

MAGICAL COSMETICS

These magical items are meant to give players another way of customizing their characters, while still being functional. A number of these items were built to pair well within an espionage campaign or with spy characters. Others items are built to help lead characters into fun interactions.

The majority of these items are consumable or have a limited number of uses. Mechanically they function similarly to spell scrolls that are ready to use at a moments notice by anyone who has them applied, or like a wand that doesn't normally recharge its charges.

The items in general focus on the idea of preparing them ahead of time. This means they can't be applied at a moments notice when problems arise. A majority of cosmetics can only be applied to a character durring a short or long rest, and equiptable items usually require attunement. In additon to this, if an item is applied and not used after 24 hours, then the magical effects are lost and the item needs to be reapplied.
